The Rainier Chapter House of the Daughters of the American Revolution, built in 1925, is a replica of George Washington's Mount Vernon home. It is part of the historical Harvard Belmont Landmark District on Capitol Hill.

Architect Daniel Riggs Huntington was selected to design the house. Previously he served as Seattle City Architect from 1912-1921. Among the noteworthy buildings he designed were the Fremont Library, the Lake Union Steam Plant and several local fire stations as well as many homes throughout Seattle neighborhoods.

The formal structure of the house is an appropriate site for weddings, receptions and business meetings. Classic white columns and green shuttered windows lead into a spacious entry foyer that highlights a graceful staircase leading up to the ballroom and stage. To the left of the foyer is a large drawing room and to the right a dining room that opens to a large kitchen. The ballroom upstairs has a coved ceiling, wall sconces, and hardwood floors. Just off the ballroom is a newly decorated bride's room. Located on the lower level are lounges for changing and a coat-check area.

The house accommodates 250 guests. The main floor can be used for parties of under 100 people. Price ranges from $1,000 to $2,000 for the entire house. These fees are subject to change. Hourly rates are available for smaller functions. The house lends itself to all types of events - weddings, receptions, dinners and buffets. In addition the house is suited for business meetings, retreats, reunions and memorial services.
